BURIED TREASURE, -- Work on the wreck of the British frigate Hussar, which now lies at the bottom of the East River below Port Mer ris New York is being pushed with great vigor. Operations were begun this season in June, and will be continued until fleating cothreaters to out the divers' air pipes and life lines. What is left of the wrecked man of war rests in eighty to nipely feet of water, and, owing to the great depth and the swiftness of the tide, the divers can make only slaw progress. The schooner Hudson is held in position over the wreck by five anchors-two active and three forward. In a shanty on her deck is a steam engine, which operates the cir and the hydraul'e pumps and other machinery. The mound of rubbish at the bottom of the river-all that remains of the frigate—is mined with a hydraulic drill. Six men are engaged in the work. The enterprise is in the hauds of a new company. Whether or not the workmen have found any of the treasure supposed to have gone down with the frigate is not known, for an injunction of a creey has been laid upon them. It is the opinion of many divers who have worked upon the wrick that when the Hussar was blown up by divers 50 years ago that portion of the vessel holding the snip's trea ury was out off and carried away some distance by the tide.

The Hussir, while on her way to Norwich. Conn., on November 25, 1780, struck on Pot Rick, in Heli Gata. She had on board, it is believed, £960 000 sterling, which was intend ed for the sand and neval forces engaged in subjugating the Americans, and seventy American prisoners who were chained to the gun deck. Her commander beached her near where she now lies, and endeavored to fold her in position by hawsers attached to trees on the shore. When the tide began to ebb some of the lines parted, while others drew the trees up by the roots. Finally the frigate listed and west over the precipice over which she was hanging into near ly pinety feet of water, carrying with her the seventy prisoners manacled on the gun-deck. The officers and crow escaped.

PRINCE NAPOLEON'S BOOTMAKER -A dia verting story, humorously i lastrative of Prince Jerome Bineparte's proverbial thriftiness, has recently gone the rounds of the Parisian newspapers. It appears that during the latter part of his cousin's reign, the prince became dissatisfied with his bootmaker, and formally withdrew his custom from that artist, who continued. nevertheless to orgament the front of his shop with the a tractive inscription, "Purveyor to his imperial highness the Prince Napoleon." Noticing this delusive announcement one day. as he drove past the shop, Princ Jeroma sent a member of his household to the bootmaker with positive orders that the inscription should be forthwith removed. As, however, he sube quently found that his commands had been disregarded he took legal pace diags against the bootmaker for untawful and mendacious advertisement of his (the prise 's) patronage. The defendant's counsel, in the course of his pleadings, endeavored, in the following ingenious manner, to show cause why his client should not be compelled to withdraw the offending inscription, arguing that such a decision on the part of the court would intal it ly result in serious loss to the boo m ker. 'For," he observed. "hitnerto passers by whose attention was attracted by the announcement in question stopped, entered the shop and bought boors freely of my cleat. And why did they so? Broause they had already said to the uselves : 'Prince Napoleon's becamake. ! That must be a good workman, and as uncommonly cheap one iuto the bargain. We will give him a trial. If you force him to remove his inscription, the peripatetic public will certainly infer that he must have reised his prices, and will hurry past his shop with averted eyes " The bootmaker, it need soarcely be added, was cast, but one can not help regretting that so humor us a pleashould have been disallowed by a French tribansl. A DECREE AGAINST MUSTACHES. - Tha London Daily News says: The shaving of a Greek priest lately produced a great commotion in the Island of Cyprus. It almost made our new fellow subjects, if they are our fellow subjects, sigh for the restoration of Turkish rule. It caused excitement in Parliamentary and administrative circles in England. Questions were asked in both houses, ministerial statements were mide, and dis-patches were written. One Greek priest, as a bear I wearing animal, is more important, it seems. than many omnibus guards. On Saturday last, as we learn from our Manchester contemporaries, an ukase was issued requi ing the omnibus guards on the Old Traffird, Alexandria Park, and Brooks' Barroutes, seventy in number, to shave off their mustaches before Monday. The majority complied with this rather arbitary in unction, but a dozen men who could not make up their minds to rid themselves of their hairy honors were prevented from requiring their work. The guards, we are told, will be allowed to wear whiskers or beards, but on the particular routes indicated mustaches are forbidden.
